1 Gustaf Dalman, “Das Haus,” in Arbeis und Sitte in Palastina 7 (Gutersloh, 1939), 133.
4 Some secondary usage occurred earlier, in IA I, when early Israelites built houses into the western section of the BA walls.
5 Hirschfeld, 259.
7 Hirschfeld, 243.
8 Ehud Netzer and Rachel Laureys-Chachy, The Architecture of Herod, the Great Builder, (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Academic, 2008), 317. Ehud Netzer believed that even the Royal Stoa in Herod’s Temple had a flat roof.
9 Hirschfeld, 243.
10 Hirschfeld, 250.
11 The first exploration done in Nazareth was by the nuns themselves in the 1880’s. Baggati conducted scientific excavations in the 1950s and 1960s and believed that there was evidence of the synagogue/church of Luke 4.
13 In one room of the first house, there was a wall with an intact doorway, and flush with an adjacent wall there were extant steps leading upward, probably to the second floor. Rene Salm has published several vitriolic critiques of Dark’s house identification, but the majority of scholars support Dark’s thesis.